

Lisa Disselkamp honored for Making Waves in her career

Receives Smart Woman of the Year Technology Star Award

Richmond, VA (April 5, 2008) – Lisa Disselkamp was honored with the Smart Woman of the Year Technology Star Award for her recognized expertise in new technology. She was recognized as a woman who is “Making Waves” in her professional life at the WOW! Smart Women’s Club 1st annual Smart Woman of the Year Awards.

As founder of Athena Enterprises, a technology consulting firm, Disselkamp travels the country helping companies with their technology decision-making and implementation projects. She has led several of the nation's largest employers during their workforce management technology (WMT) projects – resulting in significant cost savings and solving a variety of business problems.

In 2006, Disselkamp wrote her first book on WMT, Working the Clock. She is a visionary, helping organizations use technology to grow profits by offering functional and business expertise. Her goal is to take labor and payroll data from the “basement to boardroom” by helping companies use WMT as a source of strategic competitive advantage.

The Smart Woman of the Year Awards honor professional women who exemplify the smart woman. They recognize women who are making waves to improve their personal and professional lives. For more information on Disselkamp and Athena Enterprises, visit www.athena-enterprises.net.
